

I am strongly opposed to the FCC lowering the requirements of the "no call" rule in the State of Indiana. Telemarketers are becoming absolutely ridiculous these days with their predatory marketing campaigns. In fact, I get on average seven telemarketing calls a day. Of those seven calls, six of them are credit card companies wanting me to open some form of debt instrument. Recently two of these companies have called between the hours of 9:00pm and 11:00pm everyday. I feel this is an extreme abuse of privacy and a nuisance that should result in hefty restrictions. In essence, no for profit company should have the ability to intrude on the privacy of someones home without that particular individual having that choice. Furthermore, private companies should be restricted from exchanging phone numbers with any individuals that are operating on a for profit basis.
